About us

The concept of 'value' in healthcare – maximising the outcomes which matter to people at the lowest possible cost – is increasingly seen as a key lever for supporting the delivery of high quality sustainable healthcare. The challenge is how to do this in practice – both at an organisational and system level with the move to more integrated care for local populations.

The Institute supports the NHS to improve costing, turn data into powerful patient-level information, champion multi-disciplinary engagement, and ultimately drive value across patient pathways.

It is hard to argue against the theory of value-based healthcare – it needs to become the focus for clinicians and finance professionals alike as they look to deliver high-quality sustainable healthcare services.

We support our partners to implement patient-level costing and deliver value-based healthcare through our four key themes:

“The Value-Based Healthcare framework requires, at its foundation, accurate, transparent, and actionable measurements of outcomes achieved and total costs incurred for treating a patient’s medical condition.”

The Healthcare Costing for Value Institute has created an environment that will empower NHS staff to transform healthcare delivery from volume to value.”
